Litquake

October 9-25

Litquake has been shaking the Bay Area literary scene since 1999, proudly presenting over 11,500 authors in front of nearly 300,000 attendees since their inception. Litquake's diverse live programs aim to inspire critical engagement with the key issues of the day, bring people together around the common humanity encapsulated in literature, and perpetuate a sense of literary community by providing a vibrant forum for Bay Area writing. Because they believe in literature as a public good, they work to produce events that are accessible to all.

Whether it's poets reciting in a cathedral, authors discussing science vs. religion in a library, or novelists reading in a beekeeping supply store, the goal remains the same: whet a broad range of literary appetites, present literary fare in a variety of traditional and unlikely venues, and make it vivid, real, and entertaining. Now the largest independent literary festival on the West Coast, Litquake continues its mission as a two-week literary spectacle for booklovers, complete with cutting-edge conversations, unique cross-media events, and hundreds of readings.
